We advise you on the mitigation of customs risk, based on years of experience and best practices put into place.

For businesses looking to trade in Russia, local expertise is simply a must to stay up to date with regularly changing requirements.

Russia is a whole different ball game from Europe and the rest of the world when it comes to its customs clearance.

Customs allows the Russian government to protect their border interest and monitors trade, collecting duties, fees, and taxes.

Only Russian legal entities can arrange customs clearance and make payments to customs. If you do not have a legal entity in Russia, you will need a partner to act on your behalf that will act as your importer, exporter of record and sells the goods on your behalf.

Customs Russia

- Full digitalization of 100% of the mandatory customs operations for companies since 2014 in Russia.
- Gradual digitalization of marking on imported items.
- Strict rules and enforcement of import certification.
- Regular changes in terms of customs regulations and practices. Since 2018, Russia adopted the new customs codes of the Eurasian Economic Union. New federal laws on customs regulations, significantly improving the collection of customs payments, hereby came into place.
- Russian customs authorities plan to centralize customs clearance operations into centers for electronic declarations, reducing the customs points from 400 to 16 centers.

Considerations to remove the complexity for distribution and deliveries to Russia

Legal Entity

- Choosing to register a legal entity is one of the most important stages before undertaking business activity in Russia. Legal presence influences all activity, including financial and tax reporting, customs, and currency control.
- Ahlers can provide you the benefits and opportunities of doing business in Russia, without having your own legal entity. ## Choice of customs clearance

- Process and procedure occur directly on the Russian border. Only the minority of B2B goods are cleared under this option, due to significant risks which include delays.
- Companies can choose to use custom clearances companies, located within Russia. In such cases specific transit documents are required to transport the goods through the country without immediate clearance. More than 80% of the goods are cleared this way.
- Use of electronic declaration. Clearance takes place in a remote center of declaration within the territory of Russia. All documents are sent there, mainly in electronic format. If the goods need inspection, the center will ask the customs at the border post to carry this out. The cleared goods can then be shipped to different destinations right from the border. Only 2% of all goods are cleared like this.

Risk Management

Ahlers walks you through the stages of control needed, making sure delays are avoided, correct duties are paid, and relieve you from any hassle. We see an increased demand for electronic data sharing such as advanced shipment notifications. Non-compliance can lead to severe penalties, impacting your bottom-line results.

Checking Documents and correct classification decision

Incorrect documents, wrong commodity codes, missing permits. Russia uses its own version of European harmonized codes for classifying goods. Every product has a designated code linked to payable duties.

Weight of the goods

Exporting goods to Russia, note that Russian customs are very strict about the weight of goods. Some goods have their customs duties calculated according to the weight of a shipment. If a shipment requires further inspection due to being labelled a weight risk, this can result in further costs for a purchaser.

Value control

Checking data and contracts, confirming the product price and risk valuation. Looking there are no document discrepancies or missing proof of value.

Payment verification

Verify the customs fees and duties VAT are correctly paid and no wrong calculation has occurred or additional approval for exemption/preference is required.

Physical inspection

Discrepancies in content, manufacturer, country of origin, materials.
