Challenges companies face today

- Operational knowledge, service level, and communication.
- Increased end to end supply chain time, resulting in higher working capital needs and discussions on payment terms.
- Poor quality of stock management, chaotic cooperation with manufacturers HQ, resulting in loss of sales due to inefficient demand forecasting.
- Decreased forecast-& production accuracy at HQ, leading to other inefficiencies.

Solution based on our supply chain knowledge and regional expertise

Simplification and control of the route to market

By simplifying and centralizing the supply chain function, the complexity of business decreases. By doing this the control and overview are put to one company instead of multiple distributors.

Limitation of financial risk and CAPEX possibility

Smaller distributors might have an increased financial risk, and because their size might not have the required working capital to invest in stock and CAPEX.

By changing the route to market, you can invest more time and working capital in the supply chain, and as such, accelerate sales instead of being busy with operational processes. This can lead to fewer discussions on payment conditions and better availability of your goods in the market, which catalyzes sales.

A scalable logistics and trading platform for market expansion

By centralizing and streamlining all supply chain activities, you create the platform to generate economies of scale, while at the same time you put the supply chain risk to one company instead of multiple ones.
